Forecast Comments

A strong cold front will move through the region today, bringing showers and thunderstorms to the area this afternoon & evening. Several storms will be severe with damaging winds and large hail as the primary threats. A couple of tornadoes are possible. Storms clear out overnight with clearing skies expected.

Clouds increase on Monday as a low pressure system brings heavy rain to the area on Monday. Some thunder is possible. The rain clears out Monday night with gradual clearing occurring on Tuesday as high pressure begins to move into the area. High pressure will take control of the area for the rest of the week with plenty of sun and gradually rising temperatures.

Conditions will be dry for much of the week as well, with below average precipitation expected through next weekend.
